Why a Certificate Program?

National surveys indicate that the field of aging has become a distinctive career area, and gerontology is a full-fledged profession. The field of aging involves many types of practitioners, drawn from a wide variety of health, human service and allied fields. These practitioners realize more than anyone else that older people and their significant others are best served by providers who have aging-specific knowledge and skills. This professional continuing education certificate program provides practitioners with that knowledge and basic competencies in gerontology and geriatrics. Through the efforts and partnership of the collaborating entities, this certificate program offers an outstanding faculty to assure quality in both the content and presentations.

This certificate program is unsurpassed in value.
